EMPEROR WEEPS AT VON PLEHVE'S BIER

All Russia Honors Her Murdered Minister.

WAS BURIED ON SUNDAY

Funeral Services Were of an Impressive and Imposing Character—Widow of the Murdered Man Faints at the Altar.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 1.—M. Von Plehve, the minister of the interior, who was assassinated Thursday morning last, was buried Sunday, and in every city and hamlet of this vast empire, church bells were tolled and masses and prayers said for the repose of the soul of the murdered minister.

The services here, which were according to the rites of the orthodox church, were of an impressive and imposing character. At 11 o'clock Sunday morning high mass was said in the stately chapel adjoining the ministry of the interior. Emperor Nicholas and the dowager empress stood with the broken-hearted widow and the children of the minister at the foot of a great mound of flowers on which rested the casket. To the right, on gold embroidered cushions, before a mass of wreaths banked to the ceiling, were ranged the decorations which had been won by the statesman during his notable career. To the left were the metropolitan of St. Petersburg and the other officiating bishops and priests in their gold embroidered vestments.

Among those present were other members of the imperial family, the foreign representatives, including Spencer Eddy, charge d'affaires of the American embassy, ministers of the empire, generals, admirals, nobles, governors of distant provinces, like those of Astrakhan and Irkutsk, in fact all high officialdom, not even omitting Genghis Khan, a lineal descendant of Napoleon, of Asia, who is now a major-general in the Russian service.

The entire assemblage was in full uniform, and on the arm of each one present was a badge of mourning. All held lighted tapers throughout the service, and the air was heavy with the perfume of flowers and incense from the censures.

At the most solemn moment when all knelt, and many were affected by tears, the widow was overcome and fainted. The emperor came to her assistance, and she was carried out by gentle hands.

The emperor was visibly moved, and upon the conclusion of the mass, he followed the casket, which was taken up on the shoulders of the ministers and borne down the broad marble staircase to the street. There the funeral procession was formed, and the body was placed in a great white open hearse, drawn by six oak black horses, which were blanketed from their eyes to their tails in sombre trappings. A black-garbed groom stood at each side, and in advance went 16 similarly clad lantern bearers. Behind the hearse walked the members of the minister's family, and then came a long and distinguished body of mourners, it being the Russian custom to follow the dead to the grave on foot. The emperor himself walked a short distance, but as the Novodevichy monastery, where the burial took place, was over five miles away, and also because of the condition of the empress, his majesty soon entered his carriage and returned to the Peterhof palace.

At the end of the procession came four white chariots filled with the floral offerings. The cortege proceeded slowly through the avenues and streets, preceded by a squad of mounted police, and passed within sight of the place where the tragedy occurred.

The monastery stands on a plain beyond the Narva gates, and at these gates fully 50,000 persons were gathered.

After a burial service in the church, the body was interred in the adjoining cemetery, where repose the remains of many of Russia's greatest men, and at a point with a stone's throw of the grave of M. Sipiagin, who was M. Von Plehve's predecessor, and who also fell by the hand of an assassin, less than two years ago.

The murderer of M. Von Plehve has been removed from the hospital to the Wyborgsky prison. The police know the alias under which he traveled, but say that they are not yet satisfied regarding his identity, and decline to reveal the alias, on the ground that it might defeat the ends of justice.

There is no longer any doubt that the police for some time have had knowledge of the existence of a plot by a band of international anarchists in Paris and Vienna. The leading conspirator, it is said, was a man whom the Russian government tried to extradite from Paris last fall. Some of these conspirators arrived here a week ago, and the police thought that all of them had been taken into custody.

THE RUPTURE IS COMPLETE

The Differences Between France and the Vatican Are Unreconcilable.

The French Charge At the Vatican Ordered to Leave and the Papal Nuncio in Paris Will Follow.

Paris, July 31.—Although no official announcement has yet been made, it can be positively affirmed that the rupture between France and the Vatican is complete. The holy see's lengthy reply to the French note, though most courteously worded, merely amounts to a polite statement that the pope does not intend to infringe the stipulations of the concordat and will not withdraw the letters calling the bishops of Dijon and Laval to Rome.

Diplomatic courtesy forbids the publication of the French answer until the pope is notified, but French Minister Delcasse has sent M. DeCourcelle, the French charge d'affaires at the Vatican, two notes, one for the papal secretary of state announcing the rupture, and the second a personal note instructing the charge d'affaires and the others of the staff of the embassy to return to Paris immediately after his mission is accomplished. When M. DeCourcelle's advice reach French Minister Delcasse the latter will immediately request the papal nuncio here to leave France.

It is not expected that the rupture will have any immediate consequences beyond the mutual withdrawal of the representatives of France and the Vatican, and the suppression of the embassy and nunciature, as the denunciation of the concordat requires parliamentary sanction. Consequently, fresh developments are improbable until the appointment of the new bishops come up. Well-informed persons do not believe that the Vatican will retaliate by withdrawing France's protectorate over the eastern Catholics.

The problems to be worked out by the troops have not yet been made public, but it is understood that the two camps will be maintained as hostile forces, and will attempt to surprise and outmaneuver each other. The field includes 50 square miles of territory.
